There are many kinds of cultures in the world. Important events are different from country to country. So, each country has different and important events. For example, Japanese people think the New Year in January is important, but Chinese people think that a different New Year in February is the most important. People in the U.S. may think that Thanksgiving Day is more important than the New Year, but most children in the world think Christmas is the most important.

In many countries, the same color can have different meanings. At a wedding, seeing a bride in white clothes is normal for people in the West such as in the U.S. or in the U.K. However, in India and China, a bride can wear red. Chinese people think red brings good luck. In South Africa, the color red expresses sadness of death. Another example is purple. In Japan, it has the meaning of richness and power. In Egypt and Ukraine, it shows faith, patience, and trust. However, when married women in Thailand lose their husbands, they wear purple clothes in the morning. If you have a Russian friend and want to give a flower to them, don't choose yellow flowers! That color means the end of friendship. Red carnations are often given to mothers on Mother's Day in Japan, but in Russia, they are given to soldiers who come back from war or to people who died.

There are many interesting events in the world. For example, in England, a married couple keeps the top part of their wedding cake and they eat it together one year later. It is believed that doing so brings luck to the couple. The cake doesn't go bad for one long year because it has some alcohol in it.

It is important to learn about different cultures in the world. It gives us a chance to learn that our own ways are not always right.

Which month of the year do you think makes children happy the most? In that month many children try to be good boys and girls. Actually, they don't have to be good to feel happy on an event in this month. All children just need to believe in Santa Claus in order to get a present. The name 'Santa' is very famous in many countries, but have you heard about different names of Santa?

In some countries in Europe, the most famous name to children in the world has changed more than 50 different times. For example, Santa was called Hans Muff, Niglo, and Krampus. Sometimes, when Santa was called Krampus, he looked like a demon or a monster. People say that his story started in some European countries like Germany, Austria, or Italy. Krampus gave unpleasant presents to bad children. Children who didn't do their homework or who did bad things got coal, potatoes, or dirty things from Krampus. Sometimes he hit bad children with sticks or took them away with him. So, children in these countries in Europe had to be really careful to be good before Christmas in order not to get bad presents.

There are many different stories about Krampus. One story says that he and Santa were twins. One twin became good and the other became evil or bad. Another story tells us that Krampus was a type of devil and some churches made him a part of Christian tradition. According to one story, Santa and Krampus worked together.

This Krampus story is a big debate even in modern times. In 1932, the Austrian government *prohibited the Krampus tradition. The government explained that Krampus was evil and passed out pamphlets saying "Krampus is an Evil man." Interestingly, at the end of the century, people in Austria started to celebrate the Krampus tradition again. Recently in Germany, people have started to enjoy it again, too.

There is a newer idea about Krampus. It says that the presents he gave in those days such as potatoes and coal were important things for poor people. When he took children away, he was protecting those poor children from bad parents. When he hit children with a stick, he was in fact cleaning them with the stick and ashes. Ashes are still used in some poor countries to kill *germs. What do you think is true about Krampus? Was he truly bad?

* prohibited : 禁じた

*germs : 細菌

Ken visited the zoo in Ueno last Sunday. He likes the zoo very much. He likes elephants very much and never misses seeing them at the zoo. But the day before last Sunday, he saw the website of the zoo and learned that the elephants were all sick. He felt sad because he would not be able to see his favorite animals. But he also read that he could see the monkeys, which are his second favorite animal, so he was excited.

Before visiting the zoo, Ken went to Shibuya in the morning with his friend Hiroto. Ken wanted to buy a new pair of shoes. They went to three shops but they couldn't find ones Ken wanted, so they also went to Shinjuku. In the end, he changed his mind and bought a pair of jeans. They were talking about eating lunch in Shibuya first, but Ken was so hungry that they ate lunch in Shinjuku. After that, Hiroto went home because he was busy in the afternoon that day.

When Ken got to the zoo, he walked to see gorillas first because his brother asked him to take some pictures. His brother is a big gorilla fan. Ken doesn't like gorillas so much. He saw kangaroos next because he likes to see them jumping and fighting. Ken also had to take some pictures of sheep because his sister likes sheep and asked him to do so. Ken finally saw his favorite monkeys and took some pictures. He gave them some bananas, too. He bought some elephant, monkey, gorilla, and kangaroo magnets at the gift shop.

Hello, everyone. Today I'm going to tell you about my experience as a volunteer at last year's Tokyo Olympics. Although volunteers for the Olympics usually take a training program a few months prior to the Olympics, I took the training program just two weeks before last year's Olympics. After finishing the program, I got volunteer work at the Yokohama stadium. My job was to show people their seats and answer their questions. Sometimes I had to speak English but my English isn't so good, so I didn't want to use English so much. On the other hand, I was looking forward to speaking in Chinese because I am very good at Chinese. But since there were no visitors from China, I didn't have a chance to use my Chinese. I felt very sad. Anyway, on the first day I was very nervous. I was worried because I wasn't sure if I would be able to answer their questions smoothly. When the stadium opened, some guests asked me to help find their seats. The most popular question I was asked, however, was "Where is the bathroom?" One lady asked me a question in English and I was able to answer her in English. She said that my English was good. I felt very happy. Now I want to be a volunteer at the next Olympics, too.
